THREE POEMS

David Lampe

for Stephen Lewandowski

Twenty-two acres of wetlands in the midst of prime Iowa farmland, Webster-Clarion

silt loam, a glacial creation, a prairie pothole that resisted cultivation for a century, now returned to its proper function—even though my father might not have approved.

Yet when Ruth and I walked out into it
that first time

two deer, three geese,
two teal, a mallard
and canvasback fled—

living proof and
undebatable evidence
for two farm kids

of appropriate
restoration and
an ongoing reward.

AWFUL APRIL

That awful April afternoon when Notre-Dame du Paris almost perished

my grandson John,
who had never been
to Paris, never

entered or experienced
its solemn holiness,
hoped that all those

efforts to diminish
destructive flames
would not extinguish

the glowing rows
of individually lighted prayer candles.

MUSICAL BLESSING

What little sanity
I have I owe
to the blessing

of music, the art
I at times
almost understand.

I will never be a soloist instead I blend, become part of the sacrifice

of self that is the splendid release
into the energy

of Dante's
"sweet harmony
of paradise"

About the Author

A Midwesterner by birth (Iowa) and training (Nebraska), David Lampe came to Buffalo over fifty years ago to teach Chaucer and poetry at Buffalo State College (where he taught for forty-three years). Colleagues and friends in the poetic community have indulged and encouraged him, and he continues to learn from them and to celebrate Buffalo and other places he visits. His edited volumes include the Burchfield Penney Art Center Poetry Series anthology Mortals & Immortals and he is the author of the collections The Trees Walked and Close to the Bone, both from Exile Editions.

Published in an edition of 300 copies, of which the first 50 have been numbered and signed by the poet.
